Caspian Business Journal Launched Actionable Business Information and Exclusive In-Depth Analysis of Caspian Region Commerce

The Caspian Business Journal (“CBJ”), an online publication providing original in-depth and up-to-date analysis of the Caspian region’s market landscape and insights into business opportunities, announces the launch of its inaugural issue, November 2009, available now at www.caspibiz.com.

Every month, CBJ will provide a journal of extensive commentary and analysis on various commercial, financial, manufacturing, and service sectors of the countries of the greater Caspian region, including the five littoral states and the nations of Central Asia and the Caucasus. “Business Cables,” CBJ’s blog, is updated regularly and offers the latest in business news and commentary.

While energy and civil society in the region are extensively covered by existing sources, there is little news and analysis on business development and entrepreneurship in new and existing industries, internal and cross-border trade and investment, and comparative legal and regulatory environments. As a result, foreign and local investors are missing out on critical information on opportunities and challenges in the greater Caspian Sea region. CBJ provides this critical information.

Just a few of the articles in CBJ’s November inaugural issue:

- + Public-private partnerships beyond the power sectors
- + Causes of the Kazakh real estate bubble and opportunities for future growth
- + Georgia’s investment climate after the war
